

Contributors

Thabo Ditsele is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Applied Linguistics at Tshwane University of Technology, where he teaches courses in sociolinguistics and also earned his Ph.D. in Language Practice. He is pursuing a secondary Ph.D. in Linguistics at the University of Cape Town. His research interests include non-standard varieties (e.g. Sepitori and Tsotsitaal), language and identity, language attitudes, and multilingualism.

Emmanuel Ilonga is Assistant Lecturer in the Department of Languages and Literature at the Dar es Salaam University College of Education (DUCE). His research interests are foreign language learning, sociolinguistics, Bantu linguistics, discourse analysis, and contact linguistics.

Claudius Patrick Kihara is Lecturer in Linguistics at Chuka University. He earned his Ph.D. in General Linguistics at Heinrich-Heine University in Düsseldorf. His research interests include functional and formal theories of language, second language learning and teaching, sociolinguistics, morphology-syntax interfaces, information structure, pragmatics (Relevance Theory), and language teacher education.

Ahmed Kipacha is Lecturer of Bantu languages, literature, and applied linguistics in the School of Business Studies and Humanities at the Nelson Mandela African Institute of Science and Technology in Arusha, Tanzania. Additionally, he is a Senior Associate Swahili Language Trainer at the MS Training Centre for Development Cooperation. His research interests are in the areas of Swahili dialectology, folklore, and the stylistics of academic writing.

Peter Njagi Mwangi is a Ph.D. Student in the Educational Thought and Sociocultural studies at the University of New Mexico (UNM). He has been a Swahili instructor in the USA since 2014, teaching at Bowling Green State University and UNM. His research revolves around issues of culture in education, collaboration between students and instructors in foreign language classrooms, study abroad, and cultural modes of expression.

Said Omary is Senior Tutor of Swahili language and culture at the MS Training Centre for Development Cooperation. He is currently an academic coordinator for the Critical Language Scholarship (CLS) and the African Flagship Language Institute (AFLI) program through American Councils. Previously, he was a Fulbright Foreign Language Teaching Assistant of Swahili at Michigan State University, where he also undertook several courses in applied linguistics and pedagogy. In his spare time, he translates and interprets from and to Swahili and English.