

Contributors

Temitope Michael Ajayi is a recipient of a post-doctoral fellowship from the African Humanities Program (USA) and the Georg Forster Research Fellowship of the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation (Germany). He teaches linguistics in the Department of Linguistics and African Languages at the University of Ibadan (Nigeria). His areas of research interest include (forensic) pragmatics, discourse analysis, sociolinguistics, and applied linguistics. He has also published several articles in these areas.

Daniel Ajayi is a DAAD research student in the Department of English at the Technische Universität Chemnitz (Germany). His research interests revolve around sociolinguistics, discourse analysis, and pragmatics.

Temidayo Akinrinlola teaches English linguistics in the Department of English at McPherson University (Nigeria). His areas of research interest include (forensic) pragmatics, discourse analysis, sociolinguistics, and applied linguistics. His articles have been featured in several journals and edited volumes inside and outside of Nigeria.

Phaustini Banga Bayo is affiliated with the Department of Business management at Moshi Co-Operative University (Tanzania). He previously earned an MA in Linguistics at the University of Dodoma with his thesis entitled Factors Influencing Language Shift: A Case of Iraqw.

Andrew Chelimo is a Lecturer in the Department of Literature, Linguistics, Foreign Languages, and Film Studies at Moi University (Kenya). He completed an MA and Ph.D. in Linguistics at Moi University and has published on the interplay among phonology, morphology, and semantics in African languages, specifically Endo-Marakwet (Kalenjin).

Prisca Jerono is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of Swahili at the University of Nairobi (Kenya). She holds a B.Ed. in Arts, an MA in Swahili, and a Ph.D. in Linguistics, all from the University of Nairobi. Her research interests revolve around language structure and description, language and cognition, language and culture, and linguistic interrelationships. She is also a Swahili-English translator/interpreter.

Maarten Mous is Professor Emeritus of African Linguistics at Leiden University (Netherlands), where he also earned his BA, MA, and Ph.D. in Linguistics. His research clusters around four themes: Cushitic languages, Bantu languages, language and identity, and diathesis and derivation. His current project focuses on the linguistic history of East Africa.

Troy E. Spier is Assistant Professor of English and Linguistics at Florida A&M University (USA) and Invited Professor of Linguistics at Universidad San Francisco de Quito (Ecuador). He earned his MA and Ph.D. in Linguistics at Tulane University, his B.S.Ed. in English/Secondary Education at Kutztown University, and a graduate certificate in Islamic Studies at Dallas International University. His research interests include language documentation and description, discourse analysis, corpus linguistics, and linguistic landscapes.

Joost Zwarts is affiliated as Associate Professor in the Department of Languages, Literature, and Communication at Utrecht University (Netherlands). His research and teaching are mainly in the area of semantics.