

Contributors

Orowo Precious Atoma holds the B.A (English) degree of University of Port Harcourt. She is a postgraduate student in the Department of English, University of Ibadan. Her research interest lies in Pragmatics, Media Discourse and Gender Discourse.

Ojo Akinleye Ayinuola teaches in the Department of English, Faculty of Humanities, at Ajayi Crowther University, Oyo. His papers have appeared in international and national journals, including Matatu, The African Symposium Journal, and Journal of the English Language. His research interests include discourse analysis, syntax, pragmatics, translation, and stylistics, and his current research projects focus on gender and discourse, eco-critical issues and discourse, and ideology in anthems.

Joel Olatunde Ayodabo is Professor of English at Ajayi Crowther University, Oyo, where he teaches language-based courses and supervises undergraduate and post-graduate studies. His research interests include pragmatics, stylistics, and English in Nigeria. He attended the UNILORIN for his BA Ed. In English Education and his MA and Ph.D. in English.

Gemechis Teshome Chali is in the Department of English Language and Literature at Jimma University. He earned a Ph.D. in Linguistics at Ghent University, and MA in TEFL and a B.Ed. In English Language Teaching at Addis Ababa University, and a Diploma in English Language Teaching at Adama Teachers' College. His research focuses primarily on reading and writing skills and education at the primary and secondary levels in Ethiopia.

Andy Chebanne is a retired professor of languages in the Faculty of Humanities of the University of Botswana. He trained in France where he obtained a doctorate in general linguistics. He researches and publishes in linguistics and sociolinguistics of Bantu languages (Setswana and Kalanga) and Khoisan languages (mainly the Eastern Kalahari Khoe languages) of Botswana. He has actively participated in the Centre of Advanced Studies of Africa Society's Africa-wide harmonization of African languages orthographies in Southern, Eastern, Central and Western Africa countries. His current work on the documentation of the endangered languages of Eastern Kalahari Khoe is making significant contribution on these marginalized Khoisan languages of Southern Africa. He has published research findings in reputable books, book chapters and journal articles in prominent academic journals. He has also read many papers in international conferences.

Matthew Olaoluwa Ilori obtained a PhD in English from the University of Ibadan in 2022. His research interests include Pragmatics, Peace Linguistics and Multimodal Discourse Analysis. Matthew is a non-academic staff in the University of Ibadan.

M. T. Lamidi is a professor in the Department of English, University of Ibadan. His areas of research interest include Syntax, Discourse Analysis, and Applied Linguistics.

Budzani Gabanamotse-Mogara teaches linguistics in the Department of African Languages and Literature, University of Botswana. She has several years of experience in teaching and research on Bantu and Khoesana languages and linguistics and has published many high-quality journal articles, book chapters and manuals which deal with various aspects of language and linguistics. Her research interests are mainly in the areas of Bantu & Khoesan Studies with a focus on Morphology & Syntax, Semantics, Phonology, Generative Phonology, Language Description & Documentation, Policy issues and Language Proficiency among others. She is currently the coordinator of a project on 'The introduction of Local Languages in the school curriculum' under the Ministry of Basic Education. Professor Budzani Gabanamotse-Mogara has negotiated MoU's with Tokyo University of Foreign Studies and Beijing Foreign Studies University and she is coordinating projects under those.

David Olorunsogo is a Casual Instructor at the School of Arts and Sciences, Bow Valley College, Canada, where he teaches Communication. His research interests lie in pragmatics, discourse analysis and cultural studies. David has articles publications in local and international journals; his academic articles have appeared in Ghana Journal of Linguistics, Journal of English Scholars' Association of Nigeria, Lingual: Journal of Language and Culture and Ibadan Journal of Peace and Development.

Troy E. Spier is Assistant Professor of English and Linguistics at Florida A&M University (USA). He earned his MA and Ph.D. in Linguistics at Tulane University, his B.S.Ed. In English/Secondary Education at Kutztown University, and a graduate certificate in Islamic Studies at Dallas International University. His research interests include language documentation and description, discourse analysis, corpus linguistics, and linguistic landscapes.